Agenda

- How esports programs can serve as a recruiting tool.
- How esports programs can increase student retention.
- Impact of esports on student wellbeing
- Case studies:
 - St. Louis Community College
 - Southwestern Illinois College

Esports is the term given to competitive online video gaming.

“Pew Research recently found that 85% of U.S. teens (ages 13-17) play video games. Among boys of that age, the percentage is 97%”

-Bob Venero, Forbes.com

Esports is inherently inclusive, allowing and supporting participation across social groups, physical abilities, and genders.

It provides students with the same social and emotional learning benefits as traditional athletics: leadership and team building skills, and an increased sense of belonging.

Last year, more than $16 million in esports scholarships were awarded by U.S. colleges, helping to fuel the explosive growth of high school teams

-Mary Ellen Flannery, NEA Today

80% of esports teams are comprised of students who have never participated in an extracurricular activity before.
-National School Boards Association (nsba.org)

Keep Students on Campus

North America Scholastic Esports Federation (NASEF) produces a free, state-approved curriculum for esports designed to develop STEM- and STEAM-based skills as well as Social/Emotional Learning attributes like communication, collaboration, problem-solving and leadership.

-nasef.org

A 2019 study of graduated students who took some form of video game program in college found “84% of respondents stated that they were currently employed. This included full-time, part-time, and contract work as well as self-employment.
